What a Shark Swallowed.

The following letter, written by one of the officers on the British bark "Lutterworth," While the "Lutterworth" was lying becalmed in the tropics, a large shark was observed swimming around the ship. A large hook with chain attached was baited with a four-pound piece of pork. The shark made for it and bolted it. In hauling him up the chain parted, and he coolly swallowed the hook, chain and pork. Another hook was then baited which he instantly seized, biting a three inch rope in twain, and also swallowing it with another four pound piece of pork. Another hook was then baited with a similar piece of pork, and with this the shark was caught and landed on our main deck. All hands cleared from him for he was in a terrible flutter. His tail was cut off with the carpenter's axe, which quieted him a little. Some said it was not the same shark we had hooked before. He was cut open, when we found the two large shark-hooks, chain and rope snugly coiled away, with eight pounds of pork, in his locker. It seems almost incredible, but all hands are witness to it.

A Romantic Quest.

A London hospital surgeon relates an incident which furnishes ample food for the fancy of novelist or playwright: A well-dressed, lady-like woman, speaking with a French accent, requested a private interview on a delicate subject. She stated that a young woman, a relative of hers, was entitled to some property if she were married, but would lose it if she remained single. Having no one in her eye, she was desirous of marrying any dying man, so that, having been legally united to him, she might obtain her property, without, at the same time, being saddled with a husband. Having failed in their efforts to accomplish this matter in Paris, they had come on a pilgrimage to London in search of a complacent moribund. The aforesaid house-surgeon was requested to find a suitable dying man, and if he were a widower with children, they offered to make a provision for them. The gentleman consulted declined to be a party to such a proceeding, but I conceive that a search among the poorer parts of London, or any large town, would speedily be rewarded with success. Only it would be terribly awkward if the flickering lamp of the bridegroom, instead of being extinguished, were to flare up again and burn steadily.
